

Key Takeaways

1. Under-representation is the common ground in media amidst the small and selective amount of those represented
 - Many groups in today's time are still being pushed to the side as the majority agenda is still being pushed. Even as a person of color, representation for our people is represented by stereotypes that have been carried on for generations. It must stop because at a certain point in time, there's no telling how big of a population and people that the minority would become in comparison to the amounted majority.
2. The Prince's Trust
 - Having done research in addition to the context of this program in the speech, it is easy to create an inference that this program was meant to help many who didn't have the right or amounted resources to start a company or a career. This is important because it creates a start in Idris' career as a person of color in Britain and provides an open door for many who have an idea of what they want but again do not have the right or amounted resources to make their goal a reality.
3. Stereotypes
 - In reference to the first takeaway, stereotypes are a huge problem regardless of how the problem has decreased. The use of stereotypes in today's media paints a picture that has vandalized the culture and truth of the minority in film and media. It is not fair for these stereotypes to be the face of what's more than with POC. It is only right to paint a picture that depicts what these different and unique people's backgrounds are and not what is commonly depicted by the white man.

Example – Underrepresentation in Media

- Research many creators on TikTok that didn't receive the right credit is isn't seen on the face of someone's screen as often as others.
