

For my proposal, my fictitious truth is there being a 'Area 52' in Wyoming. This is an interest of me because in my early days of playing games I encountered Roblox which is a server for game/clothing creators in the platform. I played a particular game called 'Surviving Area 51'. This game had certain outfits and approaches to the idea of the Government having Area 51, around aliens and army personnel. Further in time around the days of COVID-19, the general topic of Area 51 became a hit across social platforms and of course me myself at the time being in the initial stages of a teenager, I became very curious. I became very confused about the matter but when hearing about it from various angles a bit 'educated' and the idea of many being prepared to storm the Area 51 base had me in shambles. This is of interest to me because the Government is known for hiding things from the public but whatever is publicized gets questioned by the people but does not get answered clearly, for example, Area 51. This helped me produce the idea of them having a base in the least populated and one of the least problematic states in the United States, Wyoming. With those compositions in Wyoming, it is understood for there to be a lot of space in Wyoming, especially in its mountains, so why would not there be a top-secret governmental base in addition to the one in Nevada.

The fictitious organization that would promote this truth would be a private conspiracy group of lobbyists with money. With this type of influence, this could cause another Area 51 raid but in 'Area 52' but for this raid to come together, money would of course be considered of me because I cannot get anything out of something. With the continuous addition of raiding Area 51, I would additionally add the person who thought of all of it to come together and create the conspiracy that would rather be more connective to the Government hiding stuff. I would release a book describing the past conspiracy theories regarding Aliens and Area 51 and 'connect the dots' to Wyoming being a second base considering that anyone that was here during the time of the raid knows that Area 51 exists, and the government really has stuff to hide from the public. I would then use the organization as a further publicity stunt, put money into publishing and further spreading the info, even worldwide if I must. It could become a remarkable sight but also a swindle where no one gets anything out of going to the Wyoming mountains and waterfalls to see no governmental base.

The benevolent untruth that comes with this as explained early is that it is not real, there is no type of evidence of there being an additional base like Area 51 anywhere in America, especially Wyoming. For these things to be brought out to the public, they would only be able to find out from the time of 'raiding Area 52'. The website would be down, all money would go to me and a bit to the organization and all connections would be cut off. My idea of this website would add a bit of interest from my Roblox experience in addition to the previous raid. Additional noting for this truth/untruth there may be a connection to a classmate's benevolent untruth which possibly has to deal with the poisoning of water and how there are other liquids that would help the health of those who believe. All would go back to the government.
